The tab was made of the same material as the uniform. The tab and insignia are shown in sketch 4.

- E. Shoulder epaulets, one made of gold and the other of silver.
 - F. The material of the uniform was of heavy black flannel.
 - G. Chest pockets with covering flaps.
 - H. Lower pockets with covering flaps.
 - I. Trousers made of the same material as the jacket. The trousers were similar to ordinary slacks, except that they had no cuffs.
 - J. Black leather boots.
6. The following descriptions, keyed to sketch 5, show the front view of a Chinese Communist naval enlisted uniform:
- A. Cap. The outside of the cap was made of light blue flannel or of a woolen-type material. The inside was lined with some type of a short cropped fur. The cap had extra flaps to warm the ears and neck.
 - B. Metal insignia similar to those of the officers' cap.
 - C. Flap, one end of which was sewed to the uniform and the other end buttoned to the uniform. The flap was used for attaching shoulder insignias.
 - D. Front lapel. The color was the same as the uniform.
 - E. Material with white horizontal stripes worn inside the uniform.
 - F. Knotted black tie.
 - G. Ends of tie.
 - H. Buckled belt. The belt was about three inches wide and yellow. The buckle was of copper and had an anchor emblem.
 - I. Sleeves with narrow cuffs and buttons on the back. The shirt was tucked into the trousers.
7. The following descriptions, keyed to sketch 6, show the back view of a Chinese Communist naval enlisted uniform.
- A. Top of the cap.
 - B. Flap turned down during cold weather.
 - C. Shoulder strap.

Army Uniforms and Troop Activities

8. The uniforms of Chinese Communist army officers in Dairen appeared to be similar to those of about a year ago. The uniforms of enlisted personnel were made of the same material as those of the officers; the uniforms appeared to be made of heavy flannel. The difference noted in the uniforms of officers this year was that they now have epaulets on the shoulders. The epaulets were designed to be attached to the flaps on the shoulder. There were gold stripes of varied widths running across the epaulets. Some epaulets had three gold stripes of the same width. One officer had two narrow and one wide gold stripes. A sketch of this epaulet is shown in sketch 7. The caps were dark blue and made of flannel. The caps were lined with fur.
9. [redacted] there were approximately 600 to 700 soldiers in commercial warehouses on the right hand side of a passage used by seamen on a Dairen pier. The warehouse was painted red and was several stories high. There were many grass-green uniforms being dried out on the street floor of the warehouse. 25X1
10. [redacted] Chinese Communist troops were billeted in a four-story concrete building at 159 - 1 Stalin Road, Dairen. The troops had "People's Liberation Army" badges over their chest pockets; there were no other identifying insignia. A view through the large plate window of the building revealed that the troops were resting on bunk beds in separate rooms inside the building. A green bag stuffed with personal belongings was stacked alongside each bed. They appeared not to be stationed in the building permanently, because no face towels, clothes, and other articles of daily use were in evidence. Two soldiers guarded the front door of the building. 25X1
